Advanced Linking Verbs

Name: _____

The simple explanation for a linking verb is that it shows state of being rather than action. An example of this is: Mary is happy.

is is a linking verb that joins Mary to an adjective that describes Mary.

happy. Linking verbs that join subjects and adjectives are the easiest to identify.

However, there are some verbs that can be either action verbs or linking verbs, depending on how they are used. For example, if we say: "Jim tastes the tomato soup," the verb tastes is an action verb because it is something Jim is doing. But, if we say, "The soup tastes salty," the verb tastes is now a linking verb. It joins soup with the adjective salty, which describes it.

Even more difficult to identify are the linking verbs that join a subject to a noun. For example: He became a teacher. Became links the subject, he, to the noun, teacher. This one is tricky. If you can replace the verb with a form of to be (am, are, is, was, etc.) and it makes sense, the verb is acting as a linking verb. In this case, it would be fine to say, "He is a teacher."

Circle the linking verb in each sentence. Underline the adjective or noun that the verb links to the subject. Draw an arrow from the adjective or noun back to the subject. The first one is done for you.
